

Racheal Ankrah-Fosu was born in a little country on the Western Coast of Africa, Liberia. Despite surviving the Liberian Civil War and resulting trauma at an early age; 17, she successfully became a 25-year Wall Street, Fintech Executive, and a 14-year social entrepreneur in early childhood care/education, a speaker, author, and community servant leader. She is now the Chief Operations and Technology Officer at ConSol USA, a social for-profit enterprise dedicated to bridging the opportunity divide by creating learning to earning pathways for underserved youth, women and veterans in the information technology corporate realm.

At the height of Racheal's Wall Street career, she became a caregiver overnight to her 40-year-old husband Dominic who suddenly suffered a stroke. After losing him years later, she felt compelled to author "Hold Me 'til my River Jordan", a memoir dedicated to the 45+ million Americans challenged emotionally, physically, financially, and spiritually by caring for ill loved ones. Her experience as a caregiver inspired her to create "The Ruth & Isaac Project", a nonprofit focused on illuminating the silent fight of the caregiving experience and a free YouTube series titled "The Life of a Caregiver".
